

The Satires of Decimus Junius Juvenalis, and of Aulus Persius Flaccus, Vol. 2 of 2: Translated Into English (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Satires of Decimus Junius Juvenalis, and of Aulus Persius Flaccus, Vol. 2 of 2: Translated Into English. The subject of this inimitable Satire is the Vanity of Human Wishes. The poet takes his stand on the great theatre of the world, and summons before him the illustrious characters of all ages. As they appear in succession, he shows, from the principal events of their lives, how little happiness is promoted by the attainment of what our indistinct and bounded views represent as the most perfect of earthly blessings. Of these, he instances Wealth, Power, Eloquence, Military Glory, Longevity, and Personal Accomplishments; all of which have, as he observes, proved dangerous or destructive to their respective possessors. Hence, he argues the wisdom of acquiescing in the dispensations of Heaven; and concludes with a form of prayer, in which he points out, with great force and beauty, the objects for which a rational being may presume to approach the Almighty. The commentators suppose Juvenal to have had the second Alcibiades of Plato, or the Hunc Macrine diem of Persius, in his thoughts; it is probable that he had both: he has taken nothing from them, however, but the general idea; the filing up is entirely his own, and it is done with a boldness of imagery, an awful and impressive sublimity of style and manner, of which it would perhaps be difficult to find another example in any composition merely human.
