

Excerpt from Cornelius Odowd: Upon Men and Women and Other Things in General My dear Anster, If you knew how often i have thought of you as i was writing this book, - if you knew how there rose before my mind memories of long ago - of those glorious evenings with all those fine spirits, to think of whom is a triumph even with all its sadness, - and if you knew how i long to meet once more the few soldiers who survive of that old guard, - you would see how naturally i dedicate my volume to him who was the best of us.
